Chapter – 1

Salient Features of the Trade Unions Act, 1926

Trade Unions are organization of Workers as well as Employers formed to protect and promote the interest of their members. Trade Unions have made headway due to rapid individual development. The workers come together to maintain and improve their bargaining power on wages and working conditions. The first organized Trade Union in India named as the Madras Labour Union was formed in the year 1918. From the beginning itself, Trade Unions were not confined to workers alone. From 19th Century itself there were Employer's Associations in the form of Chamber of Commerce, Industrial Associations etc. to protect and promote the interests of their members in a concerted manner. After independence, expansion of industrial activity and grouping worker's Trade Unions acted as a spur for strengthening and expansion of employers' organization.

In 1926, the Trade Union Act was passed which was a landmark in the history of Trade Unions in the country. The Act gave legal status to the Registered Trade Unions and conferred on them and their members a measure of immunity from Civil Suit and Criminal prosecution. Registration of Unions enhanced their status before general public. The Act gives protection to registered trade unions in certain cases against civil or criminal action. Employers and Registered Trade Unions are required to submit annual statutory returns to the Registrar of Trade Unions of respective States/Union Territories regarding their membership, sources of income, distribution of expenditure and detail of assets and liabilities, who in turn submit consolidated return on all these aspects to Labour Bureau in the specified proforma.
